excerpt from gallery of antiquities selected from the british museum as the first part of the present work treated on the mythology of such figures of divinities as existed in the national collection so the second gives an account of the monumental history of those works of art which illustrate the reigns of different monarchs their iconography and state of the arts this portion of the work is however of incomparably greater difficulty than the mythology from the paucity of historical remains the apparent discrepancy between the traditionary history of the greek writers and the remains themselves while the latter are all powerful as far as their evidence goes it is unfortunately often disjointed and unintelligible for example the succession after thouthmosis the second and the question of the second and third ramesses may be considered at present open to an opinion the same remarks apply still more forcibly to the state of chronology the object iof this work being an illustration of the museum monuments and not a critical analysis of egyptian history it was not possible to enter into discussion on the subject of history and chronology and the discrepant chronologies of rosellini and wilkinson have been noted without any opinion as to the preferable accuracy of either the whole of this part of the subjects requires a careful recasting and in the promised work of chevalier bunsen and dr lepsius which is on the eve of appearance more monumental evidence and critical light will be thrown upon the state of the question than has been hitherto attempted at the same time the hieroglyphical texts have been carefully translated and such as have been given by rosellini with a citation of his translation a due acknowledgment of the assistance derived from it and a most scrupulous criticism and amendment of the errors which necessarily beset all initiative attempts another point has also been slightly touched on that of the identification of some of the races and nations or cities conquered by the egyptians but this part of the subject also partially from the uncertainty of whether in many instances the names of the prisoners have been accurately copied about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks.com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition we do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
