the government s fiscal consolidation programme is now expected to last longer than originally planned and wide ranging service reforms are being implemented the role of financial managers is therefore critical to ensuring that opportunities to improve value for money are realized the finance transformation programme has been set up to develop the skills and capabilities of finance professionals and qualified professionals are better represented at senior levels however given the importance and urgency of the challenges presented by fiscal consolidation and public service reform further improvements will be needed to support sustainable public service delivery with fewer resources in the longer term government is a long way from ensuring that decision making is routinely based on robust information departments often do not integrate financial management with their strategic and operational planning departments and other public bodies have generally managed within reduced spending limits up to now but some of the savings they have made are more sustainable than others in order to respond to financial and demand challenges government needs to go further than controlling spending by redesigning public services so that they operate permanently at lower cost the nao recommends that the treasury ensure a more effective leadership to better enable and incentivise the finance profession to confront the challenges it faces the government's finance leadership group should take responsibility for diagnosing the key current financial management challenges facing the finance profession and the wider civil service and for addressing them quickly this report reviews the government's plans to tackle fraudulent and exaggerated motor insurance claims particularly for whiplash injuries it is the transport committee's fourth report on the cost of motor insurance and while premiums are now falling aspects of the market remain dysfunctional and have encouraged criminality to take root further action is still required to tackle fraud whilst protecting genuine claimants the government must prohibit insurers from settling whiplash claims before the claimant has undergone a medical examination on issues of court procedure and medical panels the committee endorses the government's intention to require courts to strike out dishonest insurance claims e g those involving gross exaggeration but cautions against hasty legislation due to the complex legal implications the report calls for data sharing about potentially fraudulent claims between insurers and claimant solicitors to be made compulsory rather than voluntary as currently proposed the government should oversee funding arrangements for the police insurance fraud enforcement department to make sure that this unit currently funded directly by the insurance industry has a long term future government proposals for independent medical assessments are welcomed but more work is required on implementation the government should press the solicitors regulation authority to stop some solicitors from playing the system to maximise their income by commissioning unnecessary psychological evaluations smaller airports are economic and social enablers they facilitate vital national and international connections for people and businesses in the uk the committee found that air passenger duty apd is the principal threat to the smaller airports sector apd cannot be amended to support people businesses and regional economies because of the operation of european competition law while proposals to devolve it to the regions would serve only to spread a patchwork of market distortions across the uk it was disappointing that the concerns the committee raised about apd in their first report of session 2013 14 on aviation strategy were ignored by the treasury the committee urges transport ministers to pursue those recommendations and the important concerns raised by smaller airports with the treasury the airports commission will publish its final report on expanding hub airport capacity in the south east shortly after the general election the whole country will only be able to share the economic benefits if airlines secure slots to provide services to uk airports outside london the dft needs to assess how new slots might be allocated and whether slots could be ring fenced for domestic services far better contingency planning and preparedness must be put in place by uk airports and by the airlines that use them to prevent the kind of chaos that unfolded at gatwick airport on christmas eve 2013 the problems that unfolded were not new and the whole event should be a wake up call for airports across the uk to improve their operational resilience airports must ensure that their contingency planning is good enough to ensure that future disruption will be met with well drilled arrangements that are familiar to airport operators airlines and other contractors and which put passenger interests first if our largest airports cannot demonstrate they can do this then the civil aviation authority must act passengers must also be promptly reimbursed for the extra costs they face as a consequence of disruption the committee welcomed a key conclusion from gatwick's own review of the events on christmas eve that the airport should appoint passenger champions at each of its terminals similar arrangements should also be put in place at other major uk airports further recommendations include that airports should develop in consultation with airlines much clearer operational protocols and guidance on the threshold conditions that will trigger the cancellation or postponement of flights negotiate robust agreements with airlines which carry formal responsibility for passenger welfare for reclaiming the costs of looking after passengers during periods of disruption government should also push for amendments to a proposed new eu regulation on passenger compensation to include electronic means of alert and information dissemination transport infrastructure in some parts of the uk may get left behind under the new system to be used from next year 2015 to share out central government money for local major transport schemes the government has again changed the system for distributing money to local areas for major transport projects with much more emphasis now on competition for funding this will not necessarily help regions get a fairer share of transport funding and could make the situation worse the government's focus on using competition to bring in private sector funding for projects could disadvantage the regions where there tends to be less private sector money available compared with london those local enterprise partnerships leps which are well organised and resourced will have an advantage in bidding for funds other areas may lose out as a result in addition with greater reliance on competitive bidding for funds there will see more money wasted on failed bids strategically significant schemes such as access to ports must not get overlooked the changes are set against a backdrop where far less money is spent on transport projects outside london than in the capital transport infrastructure spending is 2 500 per head in london compared with 5 per head in the north east this inequality must change the committee calls for the new funding arrangements to be reviewed by the end of the next parliament to ensure that they are efficient and effective in providing funding for the most urgent transport priorities the national audit office has played an important role in the checks and balances of the uk parliamentary and political system over the last 40 years this new book more than just a history of the uk's supreme audit institution examines the very definition of accountability through both an historic and an academic lens critically exploring questions about the role of audit in a democracy and how well it is working holding government to account draws on several unique sources of evidence including interviews with senior officials from the national audit office and the civil service as well as senior parliamentarians with experience of the nao's relationships with government and legislature these interviews are supplemented by an analysis of previously unpublished manuscript material in the national archives examination of nao reports and parliamentary and other reports focused on accountability the book begins with a history of the national audit office in the context of the uk's wider history it then offers an overview of the constitutional political and human legacies of the exchequer and audit department followed by a close examination of the national audit office's leadership and decision making from inception in 1984 through to the present the authors conclude with an exploration of the way in which the meaning of public sector audit has evolved over time in accordance with its wider political ideological and material context in doing so they demonstrate that any question about the national audit office's future and organisation is really a question about what democracy and good government mean in a modern bureaucratic state holding government to account will be of keen interest to students enrolled in courses on accounting public administration law and politics as well as to politicians civil servants and supreme audit institutions internationally the purpose of the report is to distil experience from this parliament and to assist the new committee in the next parliament it considers how the committee approached its work the way it has used research and how this might be strengthened and its own assessment of performance against the core tasks set by the liaison committee it then suggests some matters the new committee might consider examining in the next parliament these include both unfinished business topics the committee looked at over the parliament to which the successors might wish to return and new developments which the committee considers will emerge as major issues over the next five years the transport committee welcomes record investment committed to the classic rail network but calls for greater regional balance in spending network rail must also regain the confidence of passengers following recent disruption the committee calls for the government to take responsibility for rolling stock to address general shortages and ensure there will be sufficient trains to run on newly electrified lines the committee also concluded i record levels of funding show a welcome commitment to classic rail but this should be set in a longer term strategic plan for the rail network which ties into a wider transport strategy ii the overrunning christmas engineering works were unacceptable iii network rail must have adequate contingency plans they must also work with passenger focus and train operating companies to improve communication with passengers when engineering works fail iv in the light of the change of status of network rail the orr must reconsider whether fining a public sector body remains an effective means for the regulator to exert control v greater transparency is essential around rail spending criteria used to allocate spending should be published
